It’s just fun for you to use a filter or an app to change the way you look in a photo, but did you know Norway passed a new law to make the influencers label their retouched photos? For many people, retouching is just a way to make their pictures look as good as possible. To others, it's a big lie to their viewers or followers. Is it right or wrong to retouch photos? Let’s see what James Charles and Jameela Jamil say:

FOR	AGAINST
 James Charles, Make-up Artist	 Jameela Jamil, Actress
The make-up artist has nearly 11 million subscribers on YouTube and 11 million followers on Instagram. The app, Facetune, makes it possible to change the color of your skin, the shape of your body, the size of your eyes, and the angle of your nose. It helps you look better than real life. "It's one of my all-time favorite used apps," James tells his followers. Not just retouching apps can change the way you look. Snapchat and Instagram filters often change the face shape of the user for more "perfect", and phones now have in-built 'beauty' filters. "Photo retouching is just as much of an art as make-up itself," James tells his viewers. However, many people don’t agree.	As a DJ and an actress, Jameela says the retouched photos on the Net and in magazines made her feel terrible about her looks in real life. In an article for the BBC, she wrote, "When the editor try to retouch my photos, it's bad for the girls who are looking at the pictures. It also makes me hate what I'm seeing in the mirror. It's an editor’s message to me—I am not good enough as I am." She believes that retouching in magazines should be stopped because it does harm to young people. When looking at the retouched photos, they feel unhappy with their looks or body shapes. This usually leads to some mental health problems.

An old man in Phoenix called his son in New York and said, “I hate to ruin your day, but I have to tell you that your mother and I are divorcing; forty-five years of misery is enough.”

“Dad, what are you talking about?” the son cried out loudly.
