An AI stylist is a computer program. It can tell you how to put together your outfits. It works just like the Google search engine. The program searches for clothing styles on fashion blogs, online stores, and social media. It can get thousands of outfits from the Internet by real stylists. The program can also “read” the words you enter and then picks out important things about what you want. There is a data set to keep both the styles and words in it, and the AI stylist can show you how to dress yourself from it. An AI stylist can get thousands of outfits to show to millions of users online. What's more, a team of people update the data set weekly, monthly or seasonally. In this way, the users of the program will never be out of fashion. An AI stylist also shows how accessories go with your clothes and how they make your outfits from good to great. Sometimes it may even push the users to do something out of their comfort zone. When trying something new or different, the users are getting themselves out of their comfort zone.

However, an AI stylist can sometimes run into trouble when people of different countries use it. What is in fashion in Japan may be not in England. To solve the problem, the program designers make some changes on the fashion rules for the AI stylists in different countries. Now companies have some tests on those AI stylists. They get lots of good feedback online. Maybe someday we will need to ask the AI stylist for help first before we go out!
