Wearing a mask becomes a big part of our daily routine. Masks keep you and me from getting sick. They are useful during COVID-19, and a large number of people are using masks every day. However, masks are not friendly to the environment at all. A mask is made from plastic. If it is not recycled, it will take about 450 years to disappear from the earth. That's much longer than any of us will live. Because of this, used masks become a big problem to our Mother Earth. They are ending up in the trash can, on the street, or even in the ocean. Sadly, some animals are getting entangled by ear loops of face masks. They are caught in the rope and can't get themselves free. Some may even die from eating masks as their food.

To solve this problem, people should be careful to fold the used masks into half, then another half, and a half until it looks like a roll, or cut the ear loops off the mask before throwing it away. Some people also start using reusable cloth masks to make sure our masks don't hurt animals. By doing so, the fewer masks we use, the less trash there will be. However, reusable cloth masks may not as helpful as single-use masks. How do we use masks to keep ourselves safe and still stop them from being a killer?

plastic 塑膠 recycled 回收的 fold 摺 loop 繩套 reusable 可重複使用的 single 單次的
