In America, people have parties all the time. However, people in Taiwan don't hold parties as often as American people do. Then what do Taiwanese people often do if they want to have fun or celebrate something together with friends? If you have some Taiwanese friends, maybe you'll find that many people in Taiwan love going to KTV centers with family or friends. They sing, dance, eat, drink, and have fun all afternoon or all night there. Staying in a KTV room for an afternoon, an evening, or a weekend is popular and has become a part of many Taiwanese people's lives.

KTVs are usually open for 15 to 18 hours a day. They have rooms with colorful lights, comfortable chairs, a table, a large-screen TV, a song selection pad, some songbooks, and microphones. You can book rooms of different sizes according to the number of people you have. You can choose from small rooms to large ones. Each room has a different price. Some places have all-you-can-eat buffets. After entering the room, choose the songs you want to sing and enter the number into the machine. After that, the TV will start to play the music videos, and the lyrics will pop up on TV. And then you can sing by following the lyrics on TV.

KTV is a magical place. People go there to celebrate a job promotion or someone's birthday. If they have nothing to celebrate, they can kill time with friends. If a man breaks up with his girlfriend and feels sad, he can let go of his sadness there. Wan Tsen, who studies KTV, says that these KTV rooms allow people to stay away from a fast-changing world. People can forget their worries and share their happiness with others when they sing out loud in KTV rooms. They become closer after they sing together. KTV brings everyone together. It's OK that they are not popular singers on TV. Everyone is the superstar in the KTV room.
