My cultural shocks in Taiwan

Manoj Kumar Panigrahi, Ph.D. 2020/10/16.

I came to Taiwan in 2015. Being the first time out of my country, I did face many cultural shocks. 41 I learned Chinese for one year before I pulled together the courage to come to Taiwan. But then I found the challenge of language was much more than I expected. For example, the Blue Line of Taipei MRT is called Ban Nan Line. But at the MRT station, the sign says, “Bannan Line.” In my mind, I read it as “Banana Line” for months 42 a friend corrected me. Another time, I ordered chicken fried rice, but I got a big bowl of chicken porridge instead.

The second difference is that when people want to meet each other, they will go to the coffee shop or a restaurant. But in India, where I come from, we 43 . At first, I felt terrible, but I learned that this is the Taiwanese way. When I spoke about this with my Taiwanese friends, they said that they wouldn’t ask people to their home unless they see that person as a close friend.

Food was another thing that I was not prepared for. I remember my first breakfast in Taiwan (Danbing) from my host. I had to take away the ham in it because I didn’t eat pork at that time. After finishing it, I asked, “What’s next?” “That’s it. That’s your breakfast. Are you not full enough?” said my host. 44 , and I couldn’t believe it. I thought to myself, “Am I right to decide to come to Taiwan?” The portion of my food was too less. It didn’t take me much time 45 that Taiwan’s food portions are smaller than in India.

I wanted to share these experiences because it was my first time to be in a different country. It slowly opened my eyes and 46 me accept the differences.

Dear Diary:
Most of my classmates speak Chinese with their family at home in Taipei. We can speak Chinese well at school, too. But they don't know how to say Kiwi in Taiwanese. Today, I told them that "Kiwi" is "kâu-thâu-kó" in Taiwanese, and "chhî-yí-kò" in Hakka. They think that is interesting. And I am so proud of speaking different languages with people. Sadly, I can't speak my native language at all. I promise that I will try my best to learn it!

📖 native language 母語

50. From the Diary, Which language might it be?
(A) Chinese (B) Indigenous languages (C) Hakka (D) Taiwanese

(C)

Your day got off to a sweet start with a chocolate bar during the morning. Then at lunch you had iced tea. After school, you drank a can of Coke. At dinner, you drank another cup of iced tea. Now it's bedtime and you're tossing and turning. You just can't get to sleep.
Your problem might be having too much caffeine. Caffeine is found in coffee beans, tea leaves, and cocoa seeds. Most Americans get caffeine from coffee, tea, and cola drinks. Caffeine is also added to some non-Cola drinks such as Mountain Dew and Sunkist soda. Some "energy" drinks, like Red Bull, have a lot of caffeine. Chocolate candy and hot cocoa drinks have caffeine too, but much less than coffee and tea do.
Caffeine makes people sleepless, so most people use caffeine to help them wake up in the morning and keep wide awake the whole day. Caffeine can also help people concentrate and study longer. Though caffeine is safe to our health, it affects the way your body works, which makes it a true drug.
The downside to caffeine is that you will have a hard time falling asleep if having too much of it. Too much caffeine can also make you feel worried even though you have nothing to feel worried about. Your hands may even shake. Because caffeine can make the heart work harder, doctors say that people with heart problems should not drink coffee or tea. Another downside is that if you stop taking in caffeine suddenly, you may feel lazy during the first few days. You may even have a bad headache for a day or two.
So how much caffeine is OK, and how much is too much? There is no easy answer. Some people may be OK with five or six cans of cola a day, but others may get shaky hands from eating a bar of chocolate. Sometimes body size can decide how much caffeine a person can take in. For example, Ed, a big eighth grader, and Amy, a little fourth grader, each drink a super-sized Cola. Ed may feel no different, but Amy may become too excited!
However, keep in mind that you should not have anything with caffeine in it after lunch if you don't want to have sleepless nights.
